Well my naughty, naughty husband, how did you get down to the barracks this morning? I was so worried about everybody that I just called up home, and didn't that I could reach you by wire. This certainly is a nasty day for anyone that has to travel and I do hope that you will be careful.

Mr. Swallow is going to spend the night in the the pipes. Have you heard that! The water is now running up stairs and the flush is working all right. The water in the kitchen however, neither runs in or out, so Pop is taking another try at it this morning.

Did you get wet last night? We went upstairs directly you left and looked out to see if it was raining. Seemed to me as though it had stopped. Had it? I carried my umbrella this morning hosp. as he thinks it will be worse to-morrow. I was dumbfounded to find him here when I slid in this morning at 10 min. to 10!

It seems that B'klyn suffers most (as usual) because once I got on the N. Y. side I had very little trouble with either the trains or the walking — but while in B'klyn!!

When I called up this morning Mrs Cole told me that Pop was still tinkering with and believe me I was some proud of it. It is a beauty, ~~Joe~~, and I sort of hated to get it wet, but it dries up as good as though it had never been used. You will have to get the monogram put on for me, soon, for it will be love so much prettier then.

Am going to wash my hair and what not to-night as I certainly need a general cleanup. Mout be ~~[illegible]~~ so locked in case you don't ~~don't~~ recognize at sace to-morrow night Lovingly France

Am in a fever to hear which is the reason for the appearance of the letter.
